

MARCH for SCIENCE

April 14, 2018

The 2018 March for Science will take place in Washington, D.C., on April 14, with more than 200 satellite marches scheduled to take place around the world (see the map of satellite events registered to date here). This year's march follows the first March for Science, which took place in April 2017 in Washington and roughly 600 other cities around the globe, attracting more than one million participants.

Those who wish to participate in the 2018 March for Science can RSVP here. AAI members who wish to participate in the March, whether in person or on social media, are encouraged to share photos of their signs and displays with AAI by emailing AAI Manager of Science Policy and Legislative Affairs Jake Schumacher (jschumacher@aai.org). Select images may be posted on AAI social media accounts.

Sample March for Science messages:

- Fund NIH
- Fund immunology at NIH
- Today's research leads to tomorrow's cures
- Biomedical research saves lives
- I support science
- Immunologists save lives
- Better cures through immunology